Accounting Information Systems - Marshall B. Romney 1997

This text seeks to show the reader how to design and use an accounting information system (AIS) to provide information useful for decision-making. Focus boxes providing real world examples of concepts, techniques and practices as described are interspersed in the text. This edition has chapters on the three basic functions of the AIS together with an understanding of what the system does manually, and on data modelling, covering how students can use query language to derive traditional financial statements and managerial reports from a database AIS.

Essentials of Corporate Finance - Melanie H. Ross 2000-05-19

The Interactive Computing Series is the visual, interactive way to develop and apply software skills. This skills based approach coupled with its illustrated, 2 page-spread design is ideal for the introductory CIS course, the self-paced course or students in non-traditional education settings. The book has an eLearning session for students, which is a web-based, interactive study guide tied to each chapter of this text. Calculator sections following applicable examples show students how to solve problems using financial calculators. Professors will hopefully be able to spend less class time teaching students calculator keystrokes and more time teaching finance with this feature. The end-of-chapter questions have been doubled in this edition. Since many students in an introductory finance course are not finance majors, the authors use the chapter-opening vignettes to explain relevance to other areas of business (marketing, accounting, management). Spreadsheet sections following applicable examples show students how to solve problems using spreadsheets. Since spreadsheets are a main tool in business, it is important that students understand the basics of spreadsheet analysis.
