High-Dosage Tutoring and Reading

Achievement - Roland G. Fryer 2017

This study examines the impact on student achievement of high-dosage reading tutoring for middle school students in New York City Public Schools, using a school-level randomized field experiment. Across three years, schools offered at least 130 hours of 4-on-1 tutoring based on a guided reading model, which consisted of 1-on-1 read alouds, independent reading, vocabulary review, and group discussion. We show that, at the mean, tutoring has a positive and significant effect on school attendance, a positive, but insignificant, effect on English Language Arts (ELA) state test scores and no effect on math state test scores. There is important heterogeneity by race. For black students, our treatment increased attendance by 2.0 percentage points (control mean 92.4 percent) and ELA scores by 0.09 standard deviations per year - two times larger than the effect of the Promise Academy Middle School in the Harlem Children's Zone and KIPP Charter Middle Schools on reading achievement. For Hispanic students, the treatment effect is 0.8 percentage points on attendance (control mean 92.0 percent) and 0.01 standard deviations per year on ELA scores. We argue that the difference between the effectiveness of tutoring for black and Hispanic students is best explained by the average tutor characteristics at the schools they attend.

Improving Reading Comprehension and Fluency Through the Use of Guided Reading - Kari A. Gabl 2007

This action research report describes a program to increase students' reading comprehension and fluency through the use of guided reading.

The targeted population consists of second and fourth grade students in a northwest suburban area of a large city located in the Midwest. The problems of low reading comprehension and fluency scores were documented through the use of district provided comprehension and fluency assessments and teacher surveys. The literature showed multiple factors that contribute to the problem of low reading fluency and comprehension scores. These factors included individual students, school curriculum and classroom environment, teacher training, and family involvement. Literature review suggested the following solutions to improve reading comprehension and fluency: increasing family involvement, teaching thinking skills, creating flexible groups in the classroom, utilizing a meaningful reading curriculum, improving teacher education, and setting up a positive classroom environment. These researchers focused on the use of leveled texts, graphic organizers, and flexible groups during guided reading. The analysis of student achievement data was determined by looking closely at district fluency and comprehension assessment scores as well as teacher surveys. The teacher researchers created lessons in which the students were working in reading centers and in small teacher-lead flexible guided reading groups. The students also completed activities that improved their reading comprehension and fluency. After completing the sixteen-week study the students were assessed using district provided comprehension and fluency assessments. In addition to these assessments, a rubric was used to evaluate each of the graphic organizers completed by the students. Post intervention analysis of the district provided comprehension assessment, district provided fluency assessment, and rubric for the independent use of graphic organizers showed that both the second and fourth grade students at Sites A and B increased in the areas of reading comprehension and fluency. All in all the interventions of guided reading with leveled texts, flexible grouping, and graphic organizers yielded positive results for the second and fourth grade students at both Sites A and B. Appended are: (1) Teacher Survey; (2) Graphic Organizer Rubric; and (3) Lesson Plans; and (4) Revised Lesson Plans. (Contains 5 tables and 11 figures.) [Master Thesis, Saint Xavier University.]
